IFAP announces Jane Mahon as new CEO

The Industrial Foundation for Accident Prevention (IFAP) is pleased to announce Jane Mahon as its new CEO, signalling a step forward in the strategic renewal and rejuvenation of the industry association which has been setting the health and safety training benchmark for all industries.

“This is an exciting time for IFAP as we embark on the next stage of development. With Jane Mahon at the helm, IFAP is undertaking a strategic review and implementation program to ensure greater training outcomes and accountability to its Members, Government and industry,” said Richard Mehan, President IFAP’s Board of Directors.

The Board believes that Jane has the right blend of skills and experience to make a significant contribution to the cultural and business transformation process already underway in the organisation.

Jane Mahon is an experienced people and operations executive with demonstrated leadership success across a range of industries. Jane is solutions focused and a highly motivated professional who thrives in a fast paced, deadline-driven environment and also enjoys the challenges of leading a large team.

“It is a pleasure to join the IFAP team and to have the opportunity to lead the business through significant change as we embrace the current market landscape and the opportunities that present themselves.” Says Jane

“IFAP will continue delivering the highest quality training across workplace health and safety needs. Continuing the customer centric culture, innovation and technology will play an integral part of the success of IFAP in the health and safety sphere in the next two years.”
